

Top 10 cheapest countries for street food

If you're a foodie and love to indulge in delicious meals while traveling, street food is the way to go. Not only is it an affordable option, but it also provides an authentic culinary experience that is hard to come by in restaurants. And for those looking for a budget-friendly culinary adventure, we've compiled a list of the top 10 cheapest countries for street food. So, put on your stretchy pants and get ready to embark on a gastronomic journey without breaking the bank! But before that make sure to subscribe to the channel and hit the bell icon for regular updates. Let's get into the video.

Number 10: Turkey

When it comes to delicious and affordable street food, Turkey takes the cake. The country boasts a vibrant street food scene that's hard to beat in terms of variety, taste, and value. From savory simit (a sesame-covered bread ring) to mouth-watering döner kebab, Turkey offers an array of flavorful and budget-friendly options that will satisfy any foodie's cravings. Whether you're strolling through Istanbul's bustling bazaars or exploring the charming streets of Ankara, you'll find vendors selling delicious snacks and meals that won't break the bank.

Number 9: Morocco

Morocco is well-known for its rich culture, beautiful scenery, and tasty food. Street food is one of the best ways to get a taste of what the country has to offer in terms of food. The best thing about it is that it is very cheap, which makes it a great choice for tourists who want to save money. There are a lot of different kinds of Moroccan street food, from hearty tagines and savory pastillas to delicious grilled meats and fish. The best part is that you can find it everywhere, from busy markets to quiet streets.

Number 8: Singapore

Singapore is known for its street food, which is sold at places called "hawker centers," which look like small malls with lots of food sellers. The city-state is a mix of different cultures, and the food scene shows this by combining Chinese, Malay, and Indian dishes. Hong Kong Soya Sauce Chicken Rice & Noodle at the Chinatown Complex Food Centre is the first street food stand in the world to get a Michelin star. It serves tasty, inexpensive food. Here is a pro tip try both the char sui and their popular chicken.

Number 7: Egypt

In Egypt, you can get a wide variety of tasty meals on every corner. From the famous Egyptian falafel to the delicious rice, beans, and pasta dish koshari, street food in Egypt is both tasty and cheap. Whether you're exploring the busy markets of Cairo or the ancient temples of Luxor, you can always find a tasty snack or meal for a fraction of the price of a sit-down restaurant.

Number 6: China

Street food in China is typically cheap and tasty, making the country a paradise for frugal eaters. Affordable and delicious food is abundant in the country, from steaming bowls of noodles and flavorful dumplings to fresh, crispy baozi. No matter where you go in China, whether it's the crowded streets of Shanghai or the hutongs of Beijing, you'll discover a plethora of street food sellers selling a wide range of delicious and inexpensive snacks and meals. You can get a taste of the real China without breaking the bank by exploring the country's vibrant street food culture.

Number 5: Peru

The fact that Peru's street food is so cheap makes it a great place for tourists on a budget. Peru's street food scene offers a wide range of delicious dishes at very low prices. If you want to try something different, like guinea pig or cuy, Peru's street sellers have you covered.

Number 4: Mexico

Street food is an important part of Mexican culture, and the country is a must-see for people who love to eat. At lunchtime in Mexico City, people from all walks of life eat tasty food like fresh veggies, grilled corn (called "elote"), and tacos before going back to work. Mexican food is known for its strong tastes, and each vendor's salsa adds an extra layer of deliciousness to the already tasty food.

Number 3: Vietnam

Vietnam has a long and interesting past, and its food shows how different cultures have influenced it. Some examples of this are Chinese desserts, French sandwiches, Malaysian sauces, and beer from Eastern Europe. Each part of the country has a different taste. The North likes mild spices, the Central likes chilies and spices, and the South likes sweet things. Visitors should try local dishes like Hanoi's bun cha, Hoi An's banh mi, and the country-wide favorite pho.

Number 2: India

The streets of India are lined with vendors selling a wide variety of delectable foods for surprisingly inexpensive costs, from spicy chaats and crispy samosas to sweet jalebis and refreshing lassis. In India, you may find a wide variety of delicious street foods in any crowded market or alleyway. It's not unusual to find a delicious supper for less than a dollar. India is a great place to travel to if you're a foodie on a tight budget.

Number 1: Thailand

Street food in Thailand is safe and tasty, so it's a popular choice for tourists looking for cheap and tasty food. Thai street food is sold at fixed and semi-fixed stands, as well as by people on motorbikes. Night markets are common in Thailand, making it easy for tourists to get a wide range of street food. Some of the most popular street foods in the country are noodle meals, soups, curries, and grilled meats. For dessert, mango sticky rice and banana pancakes come highly suggested. The cheese and banana pancake topped with condensed milk is a heavenly choice.

That is the end of today's video. I hope you have enjoyed the video. Make sure to hit the like button and follow us for more amazing videos. Thank you.